Pregnancy Choices Training

Learn how to provide support and information through a greater understanding of pregnancy choices. This training explores the options available for pregnant people.

The course is practical whilst also covering the broader social and political issues and clinical options for pregnancy, incorporating cultural considerations into topics and resources.

Participants will:

- discuss the social and political context of pregnancy
- consider the cultural implications of pregnancy from an Aboriginal perspective
- learn about reproductive coercion, family and domestic violence and in the context of pregnancy
- develop an awareness of contraception options available in Australia including emergency contraception
- explore a broader understanding of abortion, pregnancy pathways, perinatal mental health and counselling responses to pregnancy.

Eligibility

The course is open to nurses, midwives, doctors, counsellors, community health workers, school counsellors, youth workers, Aboriginal Health Workers and any professional who may work with clients who are pregnant.
